Notes from the Director

It seems that each time the deadline for my column comes, I have just returned from traveling somewhere, usually for a conference. This time I had just returned from a trip to Edinburgh, Scotland where I took my oldest daughter, a junior in college, for her semester abroad. Besides doing the usual tourist attractions, I somehow managed to convince her that we had to go check out the local public library. At first she was not eager to do so until I mentioned three magical words: "free internet access".

Entering the central library had a similar feel as going into any main library in the United States. The air was that of "scholarship". Once we approached the internet scheduling desk, we were given "guest" passes and waited for the next computer terminal for our 1 hour limit. I chuckled at the form that we completed as it was very similar to the one that we use at the Dundee Township Public Library. I checked my emails and sent one to the staff to let them know I arrived safely.

The peeling paint on the walls and the cramped shelving units drew attention to the fact that larger amounts of money can be dedicated to museums, galleries and such, while libraries struggle to keep afloat. It does not matter whether one is in Scotland or in the state of California; libraries are being forced to close for lack of funding. What is in the news today as I write this column, are the Friends of the Kingsteign England Library, who took the threat of closing twelve underserved libraries seriously enough to stage a protest. What is giving this protest extra coverage (excuse the pun) is the fact that the group staged their protest in the nude behind a shelf of large-print books as they chanted, "Don't strip us of our libraries".

Libraries continue to be the "heart" of their communities no matter where you are.

Best wishes for a joyous holiday season!

It's In the Bag!

Storytimes are great fun for moms and their children, but standing in line to check out books afterwards may not be.

A new procedure streamlines the checkout process. Mothers can make their selections of library materials in baskets provided for them before storytimes begin. The baskets are then placed on carts for transport upstairs via the elevator to the circulation desk where they are processed while the storytimes are still in session.

Jeanne Etling, circulation manager, said "Our moms can go upstairs after storytime where their bags of books will be ready for them." Videos and DVDs must still be checked out in person at the main desk.

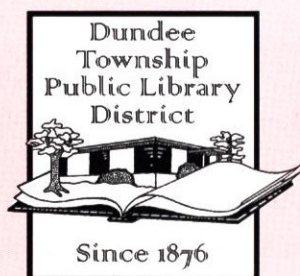

Door to Door Service: We Deliver!

Do you know anyone in our district who would like to receive our library materials, but can't come to the library?

The Dundee Township Public Library has a special outreach program, Home Word Bound, which delivers, at no cost, materials you select if you are unable to visit the library due to illness or other physical limitation.

Please call us at 847-428-3661, ext. 314, for further information.

Knit One, Purl Two...Three Generations Share Time

The room was filled with laughter, conversation and the click-clack of knitting needles as the library hosted its first intergenerational knitting class on Sept. 7.

Twenty-four grandmothers, daughters and granddaughters had a great time learning and helping each other while instructors from the Gifted Purl in West Dundee led beginners through the basic stitches or guided the more experienced knitters.

This class is one of a number of intergenerational programs planned throughout the year to bring families together in shared activities. Coming up in February and March is Guys Read!, a father-son book discussion group. (see page 4 for details).

We're Spreading the Word Online!

It is very easy to add your email address to your library account. From www.dundeelibrary.info, choose "Register for Email Notices" under the iBistro category.

Enter your library card number, your password (the default password is 'patron'), and your email address twice. It will indicate if the update went through and within an hour or so you should receive a confirming email. If not, you might try again.

What this will do

Instead of a telephone call, you will receive an email each time a reserve is available for pick-up. Plus, you will receive a courtesy notice 4 days before you have items due.

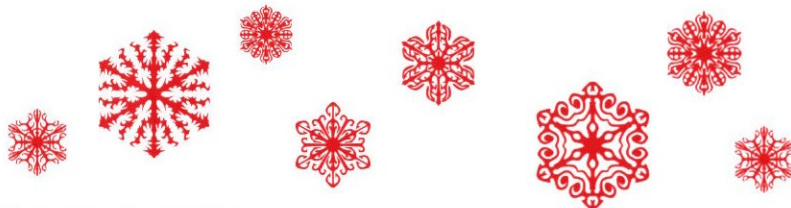

There is a link on the notice that will take you right to your library account log-in page. You may check your record and (if the item is renewable) renew your item on-line.

New Fax Service Available for Patrons

For the convenience of our patrons, a new fax service has been installed at the Circulation Desk for outgoing faxes only. Cost: $2 for first page (including cover sheet); $1 for additional pages. Ask at the desk for more information.

Listen and Read Along to Online TumbleBooks

A new interactive online collection of books, games and puzzles designed to teach children the joy of reading in a format they'll love, has been added to the children's department.

Called TumbleBooks, the collection was created by taking existing picture books, then adding animation, sound, music and narration to produce an e-picture book.

Youngsters may select a book, then hear a lively reading of the story while they view the book with highlighted text on the screen. The collection contains books written in French, Chinese and Spanish as well as English and includes publishers such as Scholastic, Chronicle Books, Candlewick Press, Bridgewater Books, Walker and Company and others.

"It is designed to develop the reading skills of new and beginning readers. All they need are headphones; a user name and password are not required," said Heidi Hohman, children's department manager.

TumbleBooks is available on all of the library's public computers, and on home computers through the library's website, www.dundee.library.info.
